California Poet. Mrs. Joaquin Miller has at length delivered her long-promised lecture on the "Poet of the Sierras," and the San Francisco papers are all full of interesting extracts from it. The history of the poet's early career is fully as strange and even as romantic as could have been anticipated, and the fair lecturer will no doubt make her undertaking pay. Mrs. Miller commenced her lecture by saying that she did not come before her audience as a wronged or deserted wife; she did not come to complain. She then touches upon his early boyhood, of his childish admiration for a Mexican bandit nanmed Joaquin Murietta, which caused him to call himself Joaquin, and tells of her own girlhood days, of Cape Blanco, the gloomy place where she lived, and the circumstance which led to her first meeting with Miller.

HER FIRST ACQUAINTANCE WITH MILLER. "Living, then, in his doleful place, and isolated from the companionship of young women—there was not another young girl within thirty miles of Cape Bianco—I became gushingly sensational. To brighten the romance of the ideal world which I had formed, I chanced to find a copy of Lord Byron's poetry in one of the miner's cabins, and through the winter. wintry weather I poured over the book. I read all the beautiful and naughty things ever written by the great bard. About this time I wrote the fatal lines which drew Joaquin Miller to my side. A schooner was wrecked or wrote the latal lines which drew Jonquin mil-ler to my side. A schooner was wrecked off Cape Arago, and I deemed that a fit subject for my pathetic verse. Oregon editors were not then the critical literary men that they are not then the critical literary men that they are now, and the lines were printed. Joaquin, or Cinctinatus Miller was then running an express at Salmon River, in opposition to Wells, Fargo & Co. Looking over the columns of the village paper, his dreamy, poetic eye settled upon these lines. He sat down and wrote mea letter. His handwriting was not as good then as it is now, and I have never been able to wholly decipher it. I answered it to the best of my ability, not being able to make out exactly what it was." DETERMINED TO BE A SECOND BYROM.

PETERMINED TO BE A SECOND BYROM.

For four fine days after Miller arrived, the pair lived in an atmosphere of poetry, and then they were married. Minnie Myrtle's people were opposed to her match, but that mattered little. He took his wile where they lived for six months, and then went to San Francisco, returning to Cape Blanco when his money was exhausted. The whole dream of Miller's life, according to his wife's story, has been to resemble Byron. For this reason he had early sought a Mary Chaworth, and selected a fine-looking, buxom Whilamette girl for that place, but, of course, never married her. a fine-looking, buxon whitamette girl for that place, but, of course, never married her. After his return with his wife to Cape Blance he left her there and pushed out for the mines of Eastern Oregon. In accordance with his of Eastern Oregon. In accordance with his determination to be a secend Byron, he intended this separation to be permanent and so told her, for, said he, "A man never gets to be famous until he leaves his wife or does something atroclous to bring himself into notice." He met with little success, however, in Oregon, and so in the spring he returned to Engene City, where he commenced the practice of law, devoting, however, a large part of his time to literary labors. The picture of his study is graphic. study is graphic. JOAQUIN MILLER IN HIS WOKESHOP.

JOAQUIN MILLER IN HIS WORKSHOP.

"Now, ladies and gentlemen, with your permission, I will introduce you into the poetic workshop. We go up an outside stairway, enter a hall, and from thence a small, dingy room, which is ostensibly the office of the county judge of Grant County, but really the poetic workshop of the Poet of the Sierras.' And here we behold the artist at work. There is a lang table covered with black oil-cloth and furnished with drawers. Scattesed over this table are books, papers, stationery and manuscripts. At this table sits the artist poring over a large open book. His pen rests in a specious instand, ready for use. A page of icolscap is spread before him, on which is written, with irregular dashes between them, the words 'ever, clever, over, clover, fre, desire,' and so on. We glance at the book spread before him. What is this book? It is a copy, of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary. The poet is searching for suphonious words. We look at the books on the table. Here is a rhyming dictionary, late numbers of British and American reviews, Harper's, Leslie's, Brick Pomeroy's Democrat, &c. Upon the shelves are the British poets, in bound volumes, arranged in rows; then the American poets and authors, Victor Hugo's works, the Waverly Novels, some Latin authors, ancient and modern history and biography. There are Bollin, Rousseau, Voltaire, Bulwer and many others."

many others."

Soon after this Joaquin published his book of poems, "Joaquin et al," was elated by its success and prepared to go to London, but, to his wife's disappointment, ordered her back to her mother's at Cape Blanco.

When Mr. Miller went to London Mrs. Miller returned to her old home, to find the settlement broken down and ruined. She was there, as he said in a parting letter, "left high and dry, as it were, with no money and a little baby in your arms."

She became very ill, and continued sick after going to Portland for change of scene. While she was sick Joaquin obtained a divorce from her. The lecturer said, ironically: "This divorce was obtained in Lane County. I was not present, and knew little about the

"This divorce was obtained in Lane County. I was not present, and knew little about the management of it. It was a part of the prograinue. He had already prepared 'Myrrh," and the divorce was essential to give force to the poem. Besides he wanted his entire freedom. I did everything as was desired. He then wrote to me: 'You had better marry some good fellow now and settle down.' The 'good fellow has not yet made his appearance."

THE PAME OF JOAQUIN.

The circumstances under which the fame of Joaquin Miller drilted to her were such that she did not feel that ecstacy that she might otherwise have felt. She was without money or experience, partially ill, with the cares of a young babe upon her. In this condition, in December, 1870, she found herself living in a miserable garret over a Chinese wash-house, on Front street, Portland. Her brother's wages just kept the wolf from the door. She had attempted to earn a pittance by her needle, but not being a professional dressmaker did not command large enough wages to assist her much. One day as she sat in her garden thinking of Hood's "Song of the Shirt"— The circumstances under which the fame of

"Seam and gusset and band.
And band and gusset and seam,
Till over the buttons I fell asleep
And saw them in a dream".—

a scrap of paper that had come wrapped around a package was lying on the floor, and the name of Joaquin Miller caught her eye. Picking it up she read, "Joaquin Miller, the new Ositiornia poet, was present at a dinner in London," &c. This was the first she had been delivered to manths. heard of him for months.

NOT ABLE TO ASSIST JOAQUIN In conclusion, the lecturess disclaimed all intention to injure the fame of Mr. Miller, and denied that she had assisted him in manufacturing his poems.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE FROST.

[From the Colleton Gazette.]
"Many an eye may wait the dimming of our shloing star." For a grand and glorious soul has cast offits material habiliments, deserted its tene ment of clay and gone to a larger field of activity The death of Florian Henry Frost was a painful surprise and snock to all who were acquainted with him, and those who will lament it are not limited to the City of Charleston, where he was bern and reared, nor to the County of Williamsburg, which he represented in the last Legislature. For his genial and enterts hing manners endeared him to hosticot friends all over the State. His death is no doubt caused by hard and incessant work in the present campaign, therefore, among the martyrs to the cause of freedom in this state mone, deserves—a more honored memory than the special session of 1885, which position he filled specificably, in confunction with the office of school commissioner for williamshing County. At the expiration of his derm of office he was elected to the house—of Representatives, where his resolute spirit and readiness of reply made him the product of the debates into which he was drawn, rising to the height of our great easie. With courage, conviction and faith to uphold him, he soon became one of the most infential members on the floor of the House.

But a few days before his death the Republicans of his county renominated him. That he was desirous to retain his place is but actual, for he had watched the navigation of the ship of State so far as to have come to have he hard helm at which he had stood "May the earth rest lightly o'er him."
